

Higher education in the Czech Republic

Degree-awarding educational institutions in the Czech Republic can be divided into three brackets, i.e. state (owned by the State proper and providing higher education for military and security personnel, about 1 % of all students), public (corporations chartered by law, about 85 % of all students) and private (legal persons accredited by the Ministry of Education to provide higher education, about 14 % of all students).

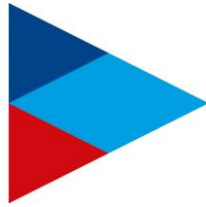

Institutions of higher learning can also be divided with regard to whether they provide education in more than one field (university-type) or not (non university-type). Almost all of public higher schools are of the former type, whereas all of private higher schools are of the latter type. In contrast with some other countries the term "university" does not denote contradistinction to institutions providing higher education in applied sciences (e.g. engineering).

The prerequisite of admission into study at the institution of higher learning is high school diploma or an equivalent thereof. Admission process itself may vary from school to school and in majority of cases comprises admission exam, generally of SAT-type.

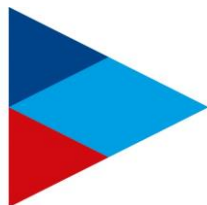

The course of learning is generally three-staged process with appropriate degrees provided upon finishing respective part (Bc. – Mgr. – Ph.D.), although in some scientific fields there are certain degrees missing (e.g. Bc. in law) or are designated by other terms (e.g. Ing. instead of Mgr. in applied sciences).
