

Higher education in the Czech Republic

Degree-awarding educational institutions in the Czech Republic can be divided into three categories: state (owned by the state itself and providing higher education for military and security personnel, about 1 % of all students), public (public-sector institutions, about 85 % of all students) and private (legal entities accredited by the Ministry of Education to provide higher education, about 14 % of all students).

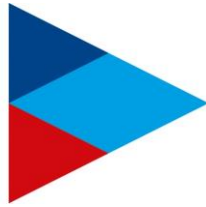

Higher education institutions can also be classified according to whether they provide education in more than one field (university type) or not (non-university type). Almost all of public higher education institutions belong to the former type, while all private higher education institutions belong to the latter. In contrast with some other countries, the term "university" does not exclude institutions offering higher education in applied sciences (e.g. engineering).

A high school diploma or its equivalent is required for admission to a university. The admission process itself may vary from school to school and in most cases includes an entrance exam, usually of the SAT type.

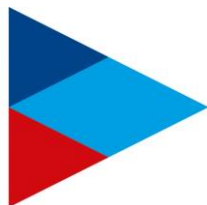

The course of study is generally a three-stage process, with appropriate degrees awarded upon completion of each part (Bc. – Mgr. – Ph.D.), although in some scientific fields certain degrees are missing (e.g. Bc. in law) or are designated by other terms (e.g. Ing. instead of Mgr. in applied sciences).
